Trees Used for Cisterns.

Among the most curious of trees in the gigantic baobab, which flourishes in central Africa, the trunk of which sometimes attains a diameter of 40 feet, according to the Los Angeles Times. This trunk serves as a natural cistern, retaining rain water in large quantities in a cavity formed at the top. The Arabs artificially hollow out the trunks of large baobabs and fill them with water during the prevalence of rain as a provision against the dry season. These cisterns are in many cases 20 feet in height and eight or ten feet in diameter.

INDIAN RELICS ARE FOUND

Members of a New Historical Association Get a Load of Them in California.

Klamath Falls, Cal.—Loaded down with newly-found Indian relics, including pipes, stone war hammers, dishes, grinders, 75 arrowheads, ten spearheads, several knives, 11 mortars and more than 100 pestles, J. C. Rutenic, A. C. Yaden, Floyd Brandenburg and George Snyder, members of the recently organized Klamath Historical Association, returned recently from a ten-days' research expedition through the lava beds.

These beds, lying just across the California line in Modoc county, were the seat of the Modoc Indian war and have furnished many valuable relics during the last few years.

Most of those found on the present trip were gathered along the receding shore of the Tule lake, which is being drained at the hands of the United States reclamation service by diverting Lost river, which formerly flowed into it.

MAN KILLS A COW SHARK

Salmon Fisher Caught It and Dispatched It With Butcher Knife.

Seattle, Wash.—It was a hexagonal griseus, "the gray one with the six-gill slits," vulgarly known as a cow shark, that gave R. R. Jones of Lincoln Beach an hour's battle the other afternoon, said Prof. Trevor Kincaid of the University of Washington department of biology.

Jones hooked the shark while salmon fishing and killed it after a struggle, with a butcher knife. It was sent to the university for identification, as it was thought it might be one of the man-eating variety which has terrorized the eastern coast of the United States.

Although it puts up a tremendous struggle when hooked, or, as often occurs, caught in a salmon trap, it has never been known deliberately to attack a human being. The specimen caught at Lincoln Beach was 9 feet 6 inches long.

HE DREAMED ABOUT SNAKES

Pennsylvania Man Woke Up to Find Rattler in His Room—It Was Killed.

Altoona, Pa.—George Meritts of Franklinville, Huntingdon county, tossed in the throes of a frightful nightmare and dreamed of rattlesnakes. In bed with Meritts was Samuel Alley of the same place.

When Meritts came to himself he still believed himself dreaming, for a hideous rattle sounded in his ears. Alley also heard it.

The frightful whir maintained a steady cadence, and both men were then aware that a rattlesnake was in their room. Having no light handy, the men were imprisoned in their bed for some time.

Finally a match and lantern were procured. The snake, more than three feet long, with seven rattles and a button, was coiled in the center of the floor. It was killed.

MAN SAYS HE BURIED GOLD

On Way to English Workhouse, Former California Miner Tells of Hoard.

Cornwall, Cal.—Mrs. T. L. Barkle of Newlyn, England, in a letter to her son, Rev. T. J. Barkle of this city, states an old man named Kempe, who came from California less than a dozen years ago, was found on the verge of starvation and taken to the workhouse. Among the old man's effects was found nearly $5,000. This was all made in California, and on the way to the workhouse Kempe said he had buried about $2,000 in California in a hole five feet deep, but never could find it.

Little is known of Kempe except that he was a miner in California and returned to England 11 or 12 years ago.

Somewhere in the mining district of California a bag containing $2,000 is buried.

How "Rubbers" Were Produced. "Rubbers," as Americans have named them, were the invention of Charles Goodyear, father of the man who helped produce the Goodyear wall machine. In 1838 it was found that India rubber, dissolved in turpentine and mixed with lampblack, would give a waterproof surface to leather. But the leather so treated was subject to atmosphere changes, heat causing it to melt and cold to crack. Mr. Goodyear mixed sulphur with the other combination and produced rubber.
